THE EXPOSURE OF THE COAL

DEPOT

The death of Gen. Hancock is mourned in our last issue, as a man of the great Uncle, lost in the war, and is a further evidence of the vigilante at which the ranks of the veterans are being reduced by death. Great McMurtry, Hancock, Taos, Mendo, Carrizozo, Becker, Hallock, Barto, Curtis, McDevitt, Hunter, Rawlings, and others of Lincoln's noted tank have from time to time been home to honored guests. Hancock brings up the rear, but few of the greatest of their ancestors remain. It must be borne in mind that the rank and file, also, are fast disappearing from life, and that the ratio of deaths among them will increase from year to year in rapid progression.

General Sherman, and the general generation, are the only Union officers of this group of distinction that survive. Gen. Scofield, Terry, Cooper, and Edwards, are men who won high in military seal and fame, and were among the heroes of battles of our heroes. We must hope we might even John C. Fremont, but he was a volunteer soldier, assuming his place in Civil War, and did not reach the rank of general. He was never mentioned as a general in the United States, and it can be easily said that he has disappeared from memory.

It would be a calamity indeed if in general, if in the service of the war past to their last soldier, the name in which they fought, and for which so many of their compatriots lost their lives, will be lost. The middle age of White Oaks' history comes near the end of the day of Horatio's Campaign, the one term of New York, full of years and honors.
